

Powder Play

Three powder rooms that pack a powerful punch in postage-stamp footprints.

Edited by BOB CURLEY

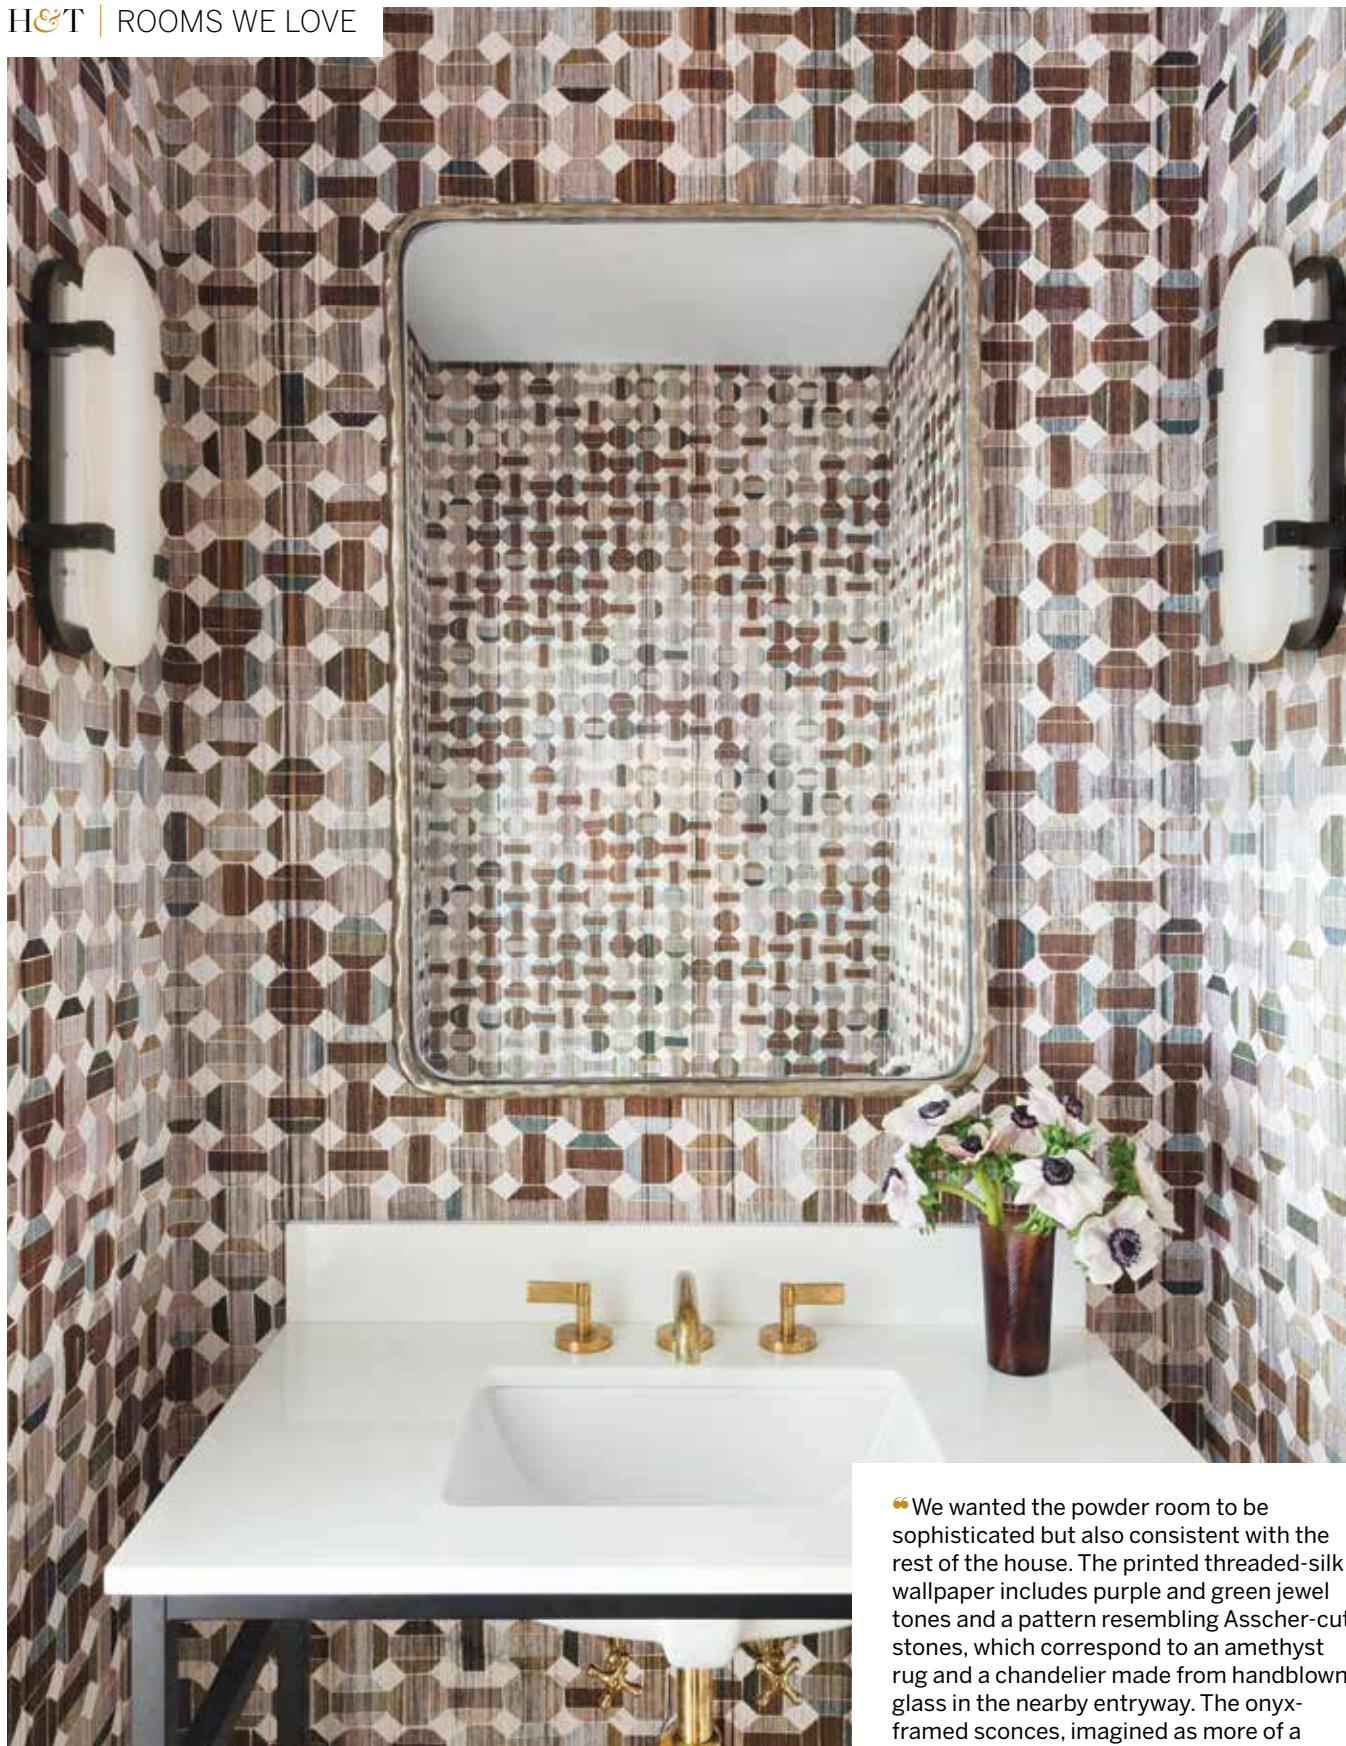

“The powder room is adjacent to a playroom and near the guest bedrooms, so we wanted it to be colorful and playful because everyone, adults and kids, would be using it. Designed for a young family, the room is funky, modern, and cool but still timeless and durable. The blue cement sink and custom Lucite mirror had to be bold enough to stand out against the concrete tile, which has been used in Europe for centuries, even though the circular pattern hints at art deco as well.”

“We wanted the powder room to be sophisticated but also consistent with the rest of the house. The printed threaded-silk wallpaper includes purple and green jewel tones and a pattern resembling Asscher-cut stones, which correspond to an amethyst rug and a chandelier made from handblown glass in the nearby entryway. The onyx-framed sconces, imagined as more of a briolette shape, glow like opals when lit. It’s a formal aesthetic, but not too precious: the room is quite literally a jewel box.”

“The client has a lot of antiques, so we were looking to mix old and new. Designing the powder room was an opportunity to do something fun, but it definitely flows with the rest of the understated farmhouse-style home. The tortoise shell mirror frame adds something antique to the room, for example. The client loves green, and the emerald Sister Parish Appleton wallpaper helps bring the outside in. The Albert Hadley design resembles fern leaves and poppy flowers and complements the framed botanical art on the side walls.”
